OBJECTIVES
At the conclusion of the conference, participants should be able to:
- Assess the potential benefits and risks of testosterone supplementation in a patient with a history of prostate cancer.
- Evaluate the treatment options available for patients with erectile dysfunction.
- Identify treatment options for patients with overactive bladder, and, in particular, for those patients who do not respond to anticholinergic medications.
- Evaluate the contradictory findings of current research studies on the benefits and harms on prostate-specific antigen screening for prostate cancer and their impact on clinical decision-making and patient options for care and treatment.
- Apply the recommendations of the American Urological Association for the evaluation and treatment of infertile males.
- Apply the guidelines of the American Urological Association for the management of the clinical stage 1 renal mass.
