Needs

Breast cancer is the second most common cancer among women in the United States, other than skin cancer. It is also the second leading cause of cancer death in women, after lung cancer.

The American Cancer Society’s estimates for breast cancer in women in the United States for 2015 include an estimated 231,840 new cases of invasive breast cancer, about 62,290 new cases of ductal carcinoma-in-situ (DCIS) of the breast, and about 40,290 deaths from breast cancer.

The overall goal of this conference is to educate clinicians to improve treatment, survival, and quality-of-life in patients with early stage breast cancer.

Target Audience

Clinicians who treat patients with early stage breast cancer.

Educational Objectives

At the conclusion of the activity, participants should be able to:

• Implement evidence-based recommendations for treatment of early stage breast cancer and its subtypes.
• Apply current research to appropriately screen patients for breast cancer.
• Evaluate evidence-based recommendations of optimum management of the axilla in women with early stage breast cancer.
• Discuss the concept of overtreatment, evaluate evidence-based recommendations for treatment of ductal carcinoma-in-situ (DCIS), and discuss the role for active surveillance as an alternative approach.
• Review various types of molecular prognostic tests for breast cancer and their appropriate use.

Educational Methods

Lectures • Panel Discussion • Question and Answer Sessions

Evaluation

Evaluation by questionnaire will address program content, presentation, and possible bias.
